A PART OF HIS STORY

ONE CHAPTER IN THE LIFE OF A YOUNG ADVENTURER.

A Drámatic Incident In a Career Which May Rave Ended Behind Prison Bars or Which May Now Be Brimful of Happiness and Hope.

"These little detached passages in other people's stories that we are continually running into by pure chance,' raid an old reporter off duty, "are the Receipts-Cattle, 1.200; sheep, 1,000, human document of which we are never to know either the beginning or the end. I have often amused myself by taking such fragmentary morsels and attempting to reconstruct around them a logical sequence of events, just as naturalists build up fossil monstrositoes, and I may add that the invariable result of my efforts has shattered my faith in comparative zoology. I am forced to believe that the naturalists are faking us. However, when"—
"Oh. well." said somebody in the office, "go ahead and tell the story and bave done with it?"

"The incident I had in mind," continued the old reporter, looking somewhat injured. "was narrated to me by a gentleman of this city who is now manager of an extensive crange grove, with offices in New Orleans. Eight or nine years ago, before he assumed his present position, he had charge of a large sugar plantation up the river, and one day during the grinding season a and applied to him for work.

"The young fellow said his name was John Mason, and his shabby clothes and a hungry look in his eye confirmed the statement that he was badly in need of a job. The manager liked his face and manners and put him at light work with a gang at the cane carriers. Mason proved a very good hand. He was steady and sober, but he attracted no special attention, had no intimates and never let drop a word about his history. At the end of the season he drew his money and went away.

"About a month later the manager received a letter from a lady in England inquiring about her son, John Mason, whom she understood was working on that plantation. The letter went on to say that he had left shome believing he had killed a young woman to whom he was engaged. He had struck her with something in a fit of insane jealousy. The woman was not dead, and the trouble had been fixed up. Meanwhile the young man had come in for a legacy of £5,000, and his mother wanted him to return at once.

"The letter was evidently written by a person of culture and refinement and seemed sincere, but, having no idea of Mason's whereabouts, all the manager could do was to reply to that effect. That closed the correspondence.

"One evening next grinding season a very ragged, trampish looking man came to the office window and asked for work. Dirt, privation and a heavy beard had changed him considerably, out the manager recognized him as Mason at a glance. 'Didn't you use to work for me?' he asked. 'No.' replied the man. 'I was never south before in my life.' 'Well.' said the manager. 'I have no work for you, but you reminded me at first of a fellow I want to see, a fellow named John Mason.'

"The applicant stood for a while irresolute. 'I used to have a partner by that name,' he said finally: 'may be it was him. What was it about?'

"The manager looked him in the eye. I wanted to tell him that that woman was not dead, ' he replied.

"Mason grabbed hold of the window sill and turned white as a sheet under his dirt. His jaw trembled for a minute, and then he began to blubber like a child. The manager came out, led him in kindly, and as soon as the Eug-Lishman saw the letter he admitted the story of his flight was true. The reaction was so great that he became half hysterical, but at last he was persuaded to go to his old quarters for the night. and the manager assured him that he TODAY would make arrangements next dath is immediate return to England. would make arrangements next day for

"Well?" asked several listeners.
"That's all there is to the story. said the old reporter. "Next morning John Mason wasn't there. His bed had not been slept in: nobody had seen him: nobody has ever seen him since Where he came from, what became of him, who he really was, nobody knows The manager wrote to the mother and got no reply, and the question arises. Was it his mother after all? Might not the letter have been a dccoy? How did the writer learn his address? Was the girl actually alive or dead? True, the manager might have settled some of these problems by further inquiries at the, English end, but he is a wise man and has learned that it is not well to meddle with detached chapters. It is an excellent rule."—New Orleans Times-Democrat.

PROBABLE TROUBLE FOR ENGLAND

There appears to be more trouble that England may have to meet than the war forced upon the Boers to secure British ascendency in South Africa. The European nations do not like the course of England ge erally and more particularly in the Transvail matter. It appears from reports made from reliable sources that the nations are of the opinion that England's humiliation is necessary for the protection of the other powers.

The late action of Great Britain in Sordan against France is a source of and raceived no fertilization. grievance to the French people that is calculated to enliet the feelings of that people in any proceeding against England, and if the general statements made regarding the position of the French people are true, it is very likely that France would be willing to sustain a part in a drama that would curtail the power of England.

Russia is not in a good mood over expansion by the British. She would like to reduce the power as well as territory of the islanders by taking under its care the larger portion of India; and there are some little matters at the Orient and other places on the earth where Russia could gain an advantage by reducing the territory and power of Juhn Bull.

Germany is not inclined to make active cause against the Emperor's grandmother, but the people of the empire have no such feeling.

Britain's late mobilization of her fleet of warships foreshadows more trouble than there is in South Africa. The large preparations for war that have been made are not required for South African purposes, because they in California. could not be used against the Transvaal and Free State people. There is in the growl that comes from the Russian bear and in English war preparations more than there is in mere reports of greater trouble, than there is trouble for the British in the Trans-

N. E. Wilson, chemist at the University experiment station, has made analyses of augar beets grown by H. B. Maxson near this city, as follows:

The samples ranged in weight from 11 to 141/2 ounces. Their precentages of solids was from 20 50 to 21.30. They contained from 17.90 to 19 40 per cent augar. In parity they were from 87.31 to 91.07 per cent.

Professor Wilson made the following

"Shape, fair--little short From this circumstance and the tendency for roots to turn off at angle, we infer that plowing was shallow."

> A carload of alfaifa seed from Utah was disposed of the other day by a local firm to Truckee Meadow farmers.

> This firm is in receipt of letters from Anstralia, Germany and various parts of the United States inquiring about seed. These dealers believe they could find a market for all the alfalfa seed that could be produced here.

> There is money, they say, in this line of industry; more than is made by raising alfalfa for hay. Besides, the extraction of the seed does not leave the alfalfa valueless. It still is excellent for feeding sheep and young cattle.

Prosperu s Season.

Ray, Father J. J. Claire, in charge of the Truckee parish, has just completed his fell circuit through Sierra, Honey Liske and Long valleys, by way of Reno. He unreservedly stated to a Journal reporter that wherever he went, particularly in the agricultural districte, he encountered happy faces, owing to bounteons crop and to profitable sales of cuttle and sheep.

NEVADA COLONY MAKING PREPARATIONS

Good Times Are in Store for the Cavalrymen from the Sagebrush State.

The Nevada colony in San Francisco is untiring in its efforts to provide a cordial greating for "our boys."

Miss Joy of this city has received a letter from a relative who is upon the reception committee. She permits the Journal to make the following excerpts:

"We are busy as bees getting everything in readiness for the boys from Nevada.

"Mayor Phelan has provided us with a tue, and as soon as the transport is sighted a committee will go out to meet it. We will probably have a band of music on board.

"The soldiers will be presented with reminders of home in the shape of sagebrush boutonnieres. Letters and paired by Will G. Doane in firstolass messages from home will be given style. All work guaranteed. Give them. They will receive a lot of choice fruit and other gifts, including an Eghth army corps silk flag for each man.

Work for Federal Appropriations.

Congressman Newlands, when addressing the Chamber of Commerce in Carson City, advised the people of this section to work in co-operation with the surrounding sections and then build up its system of irrigation withthe reason for this advice was on ac count of the great delay that always follows governmental assistance, says the Appeal. Congressman Newlands with other statesmen from the west could make a strong fight for the recognition of the west by demanding ap propriations for the help of the arid sections. Churchill, Lyon, Ormsby, west, and Douglas counties are in a line of this watershed section and by a combined effort on the part of the four counties land enough could be placed under cultivation by storage water to more than double the present tax receipts. Action will soon be taken calling for a general conference of these four counties and if the matter is properly bandled a conclusion will be doller an acre now will advance to $25. Douglas has set the example and the other counties should follow.
